or anyone else. You are wandering from the subject again, neighbor. What President Taft specifically referred to was the power of single representatives or senators, even though their states be small and their strength as states relatively weak. And if the contemporary will read the address of Taft carefully, it will see that it lauds the influence of individuals, not states, with the latter getting a measure of glorification through being represented by great men.

Says the St. Albans Messenger: "Franklin county is undergoing a very radical change in the nature of its inhabitants, and one of its many old springs has deepened Mayflower ancestry at all." Quite a remarkable step, we'll agree; but we didn't think it so violent as that.

IRRESPONSIBILITY OF VOTERS.

There are thirty citizens in the Vermont town of New Haven, who, if reports are to be credited, need a little lesson in civic responsibility. These citizens, so the story runs, got their heads together and in a fanciful mood tried to agree on a candidate for any of the offices to be voted for at town meeting. Try as long as they might, they did not come to a full agreement on a single candidate for any office, but being still in a fanciful state of mind they wanted to agree on something, so they unanimously decided to vote "yes" on the local option question as to the legal sale of liquor in their town, whether their convictions lay in that direction or not. Therefore, when it came to town meeting day, they stood by their agreement, and, New Haven being a small town, they turned the balloting in favor of licensed saloons. Real sentiment in the community is against the saloon, and it is likely that no licenses will be granted, although there was a "yes" majority of seven votes.

Perhaps no subversion of public opinion will be accomplished through the foolish action of those thirty voters; but, even then, there should not be any relaxation in condemnation of them. If there are thirty voters in New Haven who hold their civic responsibility so lightly as to pool their votes because of a mere whim, they do not deserve to have the right of voting. It would have been the same if the thirty had made a thoughtless agreement to vote against the licensing of saloons. Voting without regard to honest convictions is wrong. What the democratic form of government needs is not less responsibility on the part of the voters, but more; and it is a decidedly poor example which the thirty voters of New Haven set. This we say with the understanding that the report was well founded.
